Excerpt: .is pretty well exploited, and the penknife has been busy on every spot within reach. A way to Hastings by Tunbridge Wells lay in coaching days through Frant, Wadhurst, and Ticehurst, emerging upon the direct road again at Stone Crouch. It is a wildly beautiful wooded district, passing through a line of country where an immense upholstered letter A is noticeable on almost every cottage, sometimes in company with the Neville portcullis, indicating the ownership of the Marquis o f Abergavenny in the country-side. Near Frant an extraordinary gateway into the park of Eridge abuts upon the wayside, flanked by his Bull s lead crest and adorned with the punning motto, Ne vile velis: Wish nothing base. A proud motto, woefully smirched by Lord William Neville in recent years, when he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for forgery. XXIX The main road is more quickly regained at Pembury Green, where the last suburbs of Tunbridge Wells end. Pemburv Green is an old hamlet reared in modern times up to the status of a separate parish, with a tall-spired church built where it has no business to be--on the green that gives the place its distinguishing name. There are plenteous evidences, in the number of inns and Cyclists Rests, that Pembury Green is a favourite resort in the long days of summer. The number of refreshment places along the Hastings Road catering for cyclists is more marked than even on that very much...
