There was the big girl, who had her hair in braids now; why, the rag doll had gone to bed with her when she wasn't an inch higher than the door knob. There was the middlesized child, who went to school now; why, the rag doll had been left outdoors all night many a time by the middle-sized child. And, last of all, there was the baby--bless his pink toes! Didn't he take the rag doll to bed with him just the way the other children had so many years ago? But the rag doll was very, very old, and one very beautiful Christmas time she began to show her age. It began with her back. She had been loved so much and squeezed so much about her waist line that some of her sawdust went up, and some of her sawdust went down--and the place where there should have been sawdust was as empty as a well and she could not sit up. Then her toes began to wear off. She had taken so many long walks with the children, barefooted, that the cloth had begun to wear off her feet, and that was why her toes were coming through. And her hair had come out, dreadfully, and her nose was gone from a great deal of kissing and her pretty pink cheeks were washed away by the rains at night when she had been left...
