Not illustrated. 1833 Excerpt: . . . their character and their talents; that they are seldom pronounced, when they occur in the public services, without a secret revulsion in both minister and people, and that they are a burden on the consciences of very many of those young men who, in our universities, are called upon to subscribe to the Prayer Book and Thirty-nine Articles. The other alteration which I wish to see effected, is the omission of the words most religious, (most religious king) in the prayer for the Parliament, which looks too like flattery or servility. It was the intention of the commissioners for reviewing the Liturgy in 1689, to omit in the prayers this and the like expressions, and to use only the words our king, or our sovereign. It would, I think, be a material improvement in our church service, if some alterations were made in the Proper Lessons for Sundays. He hints that it would be desirable to have a selection of lessons from the New Testament, and a selection of proper Psalms. He complains of the length of the Morning Service, and the needless repetitions in it; advising that one abridged service should be constructed out of the three now united together. The repetition of a profession of faith, the recital, for instance, both of the Apostles Creed, and of the Nicene Creed, in what is practically one public service, cannot be deemed necessary. His remarks on the necessity of alterations in the I am...
