With the gallant Heckman, intrepid Belger, and other officers whose good opinion it was my privilege to enjoy, I passed a few days in Libby Prison, and was successively introduced to other gay and festive scenes in the so-called Confederate States. But to men thoroughly in earnest to serve their imperilled country, the attractions offered for our gratification by rebel officials, failed to make life happy in the Sunny South: in point of fact, the captives with whom I mingled despised the hospitalities tendered. Nay, more; the souls of these brave men animated them to resolute action to escape from their depressing surroundings. At Macon and Savannah carefully devised plans for regaining our liberty received the hearty approval of many who owned that no peril or hardship should hinder them from again following the old flag as it was borne aloft on ensanguined fields; and weeks of severe toil were cheerfully endured in constructing tunnels for escape. Though baffled by treachery in a promising enterprise for regaining our freedom by tunnelling, I conscientiously declare that I never ceased to cherish the hope of escape from rebel prisons. True, the prospect was gloomy indeed. Confined in fetid strongholds and...
