Sarcoma of the choroid is unilateral as a rule. It originates in the larger blood vessels, is composed of round or spindle cells, and is usually pigmented (melano-sar-coma), although in a small percentage of cases the pigment is absent leuco-sarcoma). The latter develops in the anterior portion of the uveal tract, and at a much earlier age than the melanotic. which is rarely observed under the age of forty. In the choroid it is almost always primary and destroys the eye. Because of its tendency to recur after removal, and to give rise to secondary growths in other parts of the body, it is always malignant, and unless removed very early results in death, soon or late. Four well-defined stages mark the natural course of the disease. First, or latent stage. Unless it begins at the macula, vision is disturbed little, if at all, while the tumor is small, and hence it is likely to escape notice. Even during this time, however, if the eye is examined by the ophthalmoscope, more or less detachment of the retina will be observed. As the tumor grows, the detachment enlarges, and the corresponding defect in the visual field increases until the blindness is complete. Up to this time, the aye seems unchanged externally, but after a year or so a sudden increase of tension ushers in the Second, or inflammatory stage Pain and the other signs of sub-acute glaucoma accompany it, and from this on the suffering is constant, the eye...
